THE THOMPSON FARM

The Outbuildings face south on the north west corner of Manor Lane and Route 108, just east of the main twentieth century stone house.

They consist of a barn which has been converted to a residence, and a one and a half story high, gabled roof (running east-west), two bay wide, one room deep, stone spring house facing south. It holds an interior water trough and features flat stone lintels and sills as well as fine quoining.

A rectangular open bible and cross paneled door is located in the west bay of the south wall and east of it a three light, rectangular window. Another three light window is located in the north and in the east wall.

Along the north wall of this stone spring house extends a two story high, gabled roof (running north-south) frame building, once believed to be used as slave quarters for the main house, with east and west rectangular entrances. A six light window is located on the second floor of the east and west wall and an enclosed staircase with batten wood door entrance in the north west corner of the building, ascending along the north wall, which holds a second floor six light window. The interior features wide, random width boards and log supporting beams holding the second floor.

Along the east wall of the old stone dairy, a one and a half story high gabled roof (running east-west) stone, two car garage has been constructed with wide garage doors facing south. This is a twentieth century addition which has been constructed to blend with the original stone dairy. It's east elevation is exceptional in this respect, featuring rectangular, double-hung windows, holding six-over-six lights with a central four light attic window. This building also features cement sills and fine flat lintels.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Thompson Farm Outbuildings are notable historically and architecturally to Howard County and the state of Maryland.

Historically they adjoin Doughoregan Manor, located on the northwest corner of Route 108 and Manor Lane, which leads to the old estate of Charles Carroll of Carrollton.

Architecturally the dairy is representative of the fine stone buildings which are found throughout Howard County and which feature fine stone quoining, projecting stone sills and flat stone lintels as well as fine scale and proportions. An interesting water trough is also featured here.

The buildings constructed off this gabled roof spring house are also noteworthy. They consist of a nineteenth century two story high, frame building, believed to have been used as a slave quarters, and a twentieth century stone, two car garage, which has been constructed to blend with the early nineteenth century stone dairy. The latter features an east wall holding two rectangular, double-hung windows with six-over-six lights and a four light attic window, so typical of early stone buildings.

These century old outbuildings are located on the Hopkins Atlas of 1878 as part of the farm of Michael Dorsey. At one time many of these stone buildings were located on adjoining Doughoregan Manor and other farms and estates. As time went by and the property was taxed on the basis of these buildings, those which were unnecessary to the operation of those estates or farms were dismantled. Some few dozen or so remain where hundreds once stood. The importance of identifying and preserving those which remain becomes more and more important as planned high density development becomes more and more threatening. Only one example of this threat is the present plan to raze the stone house and main house at Gray Rock, located off Route 144, for a modern subdivision.

The Thompson Farm is presently owned by the Board of Education of Howard County. These outbuildings may be in future jeopardy and should be placed on the National Register of Historic Places to help insure their continued presentation.
